Title: A case report of schizophrenia with severe disability: the eclectic family therapy approach

The family rituals were performed regularly in spite of the patient's illness but taking her out to family functioning was absent.

The client's mother was instrumental in managing the client and she did most of the basic needs for the client.

Her behavioural excesses were identified as spending too much time alone – withdrawn and isolated, had difficulty in getting sleep, fatigued most of the time, fantasised strange thoughts, and had hallucinatory with deprecatory content.

helping the client to calm down and identify his emotional exacerbation by himself and then asking non-offending questions;

Parents were guided to realise that primary social support is very important for the client at this stage and her parents needed to encourage the client to identify relatives, friends, and community resources that could provide support to her.

The errors are regretted.
